

5 Things Your Broker Site Is Costing You Right Now

A free guide from Senja Studio

Most mortgage broker websites lose enquiries every single day — not because of bad traffic, but because of five specific, fixable problems. This guide names each one, explains exactly why it costs you clients, and tells you what to do about it.

Mortgage Broker Website Specialists · Worldwide · From £2,500

01

No segmented CTAs for different client types

THE PROBLEM

Your homepage has one generic call-to-action for everyone. Self-employed applicants, first-time buyers, landlords, and complex cases all land on the same page and read the same message — as if their situations are identical.

WHY IT COSTS YOU ENQUIRIES

Your highest-value clients — the self-employed, the complex cases, the contractors — are leaving without enquiring. Not because they're not interested. Because nothing on your site signals that you understand their specific situation. They assume you're a generalist, and they move on to a broker who looks like a specialist.

THE FIX

Build separate CTA pathways for each client type. A self-employed applicant should see 'Self-employed? We specialise in this' with its own journey. A complex case should see language that validates their situation before asking them to book. Segmented CTAs consistently convert at 2–3x the rate of generic ones — because they make the client feel found, not just reached.

02

Google reviews are buried — or missing entirely

THE PROBLEM

Your star rating and client reviews aren't visible in the first five seconds. They're either hidden below the fold, sitting quietly in a footer, tucked behind a link, or absent from the site altogether.

WHY IT COSTS YOU ENQUIRIES

A mortgage is the largest financial decision most people make. Before they pick up the phone, they need to know other people have trusted you and had a good experience. If that evidence isn't immediately visible, the decision defaults to the broker whose site shows it clearly. You're losing clients not because you have fewer reviews — but because you're not showing them at the right moment.

THE FIX

Your Google star rating and your single best review belong in the hero section — before anyone scrolls. Not in a dedicated testimonials section three screens down. Right there, at the top, where trust is established or lost. Update it every time you receive a new review. This single repositioning of existing content consistently produces measurable increases in enquiry rates within weeks.

03

FCA authorisation isn't visible above the fold

THE PROBLEM

Your FCA reference number and authorisation statement are buried in the footer — if they exist on the site at all. Most visitors never see them. Many broker sites either omit them entirely or treat them as legal small print rather than a trust signal.

WHY IT COSTS YOU ENQUIRIES

Mortgage advice is a regulated activity and clients know it. When someone lands on your site and can't immediately confirm you're authorised, they question your legitimacy. Some will leave. Others will book — and then spend the next 48 hours wondering if they made the right call. You may also be in breach of FCA financial promotion requirements, which carry serious consequences.

THE FIX

Your FCA reference number and authorisation statement should appear in your navigation bar or directly below your hero headline — styled as a trust badge, not buried as disclaimer text. Add it to every page. It takes less than an hour to implement correctly and immediately elevates perceived credibility. It signals: I am legitimate, I am regulated, you are safe here.

04

No instant booking or direct contact option

THE PROBLEM

Your site forces interested clients through a contact form and a waiting period. There's no Calendly link, no WhatsApp button, no click-to-call on mobile. The only action available is 'send a message and hope for a reply.'

WHY IT COSTS YOU ENQUIRIES

The moment a client decides they want to move forward, friction is your enemy. A motivated applicant at 10pm on a Sunday wants to book a slot now — not fill in a form and wait 48 hours for a response. Every hour between intent and contact is an opportunity for them to find a broker whose site let them act immediately. You don't lose clients because your service is worse. You lose them because your site made it harder to reach you.

THE FIX

Add a Calendly booking link so clients can self-schedule without waiting for you to respond. Add a WhatsApp direct link for mobile users — a single tap from your phone number to a pre-filled opening message. Make it possible to reach you in three different ways from any page on your site. Reduce the time between 'I'm interested' and 'I've booked' to under 60 seconds.

05

The mobile experience is an afterthought

THE PROBLEM

Your site was built for desktop and adapted for mobile — not designed mobile-first. On a phone, text is too small to read comfortably, CTAs are difficult to tap, images are cropped incorrectly, and the layout stacks in a way that buries your most critical information below the fold.

WHY IT COSTS YOU ENQUIRIES

Over 60% of mortgage searches happen on mobile — during a commute, on a lunch break, late at night after putting the kids to bed. These are exactly the moments when someone decides to take action. If your mobile experience is uncomfortable, slow, or confusing, you're losing the majority of your potential clients before they've read a single line of copy. Your competitors with mobile-first sites are capturing them instead.

THE FIX

Rebuild the mobile layout from scratch — not as a scaled-down version of desktop. Your headline and star rating should be visible without scrolling. Your primary CTA should be full-width and easy to tap with a thumb. Your phone number should be one tap away from a direct call. Test every single page on an actual phone before considering any of it done. Mobile is not a variant. It is your primary channel.
